CASHLESS
PAYMENTS CONFERENCE
13 NOVEMBER 2020

LIVE WEBINAR

Webinar Background

Vukani Communications is back again with the 6th edition of the Cashless Payments Conference. This time around the conference is virtual and will be held on 13 November 2020.

There is no doubt that coronavirus pandemic is having a significant impact on society and industries worldwide – and the payments industry is no exception. And the pandemic has finally given the public a firm reason to give up cash. There is currently a widespread change in consumer behaviour propelling the desire for a cashless society forward – including for those who were previously skeptical of going cashless.

Thus, the acceleration towards a cashless society is one of the key opportunities that can be said to have emerged from the pandemic, bringing the advantages of digital payments to the fore including lower fees, convenience, seamless delivery, greater security, and more flexible payment options.

A study by MasterCard revealed that since the beginning of Covid-19 with particular reference to South Africa, 89 percent of South African respondents have been using contactless methods to pay for groceries, 60 percent for pharmaceutical items, 39 percent for other retail items, 15 percent for fast food, and 8 percent for transport.

The perception of cards and cash as vehicles for transferring microorganisms has changed how people physically interact with their payments in favour of contactless options. With health and safety being top priorities, this trend could become more permanent with hygiene measures and social distancing likely to become part and parcel of our daily realities for years to come.

Despite these notable positive changes, electronic payments remain complex. There is still need to balance security, convenience and hygiene, protect, improve usability and familiarity especially with the informal sector. Moreover, government support and trust in improving technology and infrastructure for the cashless society to take shape has become mandatory.

Attend and get to know more on developments and innovations happening within the cashless payments industry since the Covid-19 pandemic.
